Untitled by Andy Goldsworthy

Andy Goldsworthy is a sculptor and photographer who works with the natural environment to create both large and small art works. The sculptures, made out of natural materials, are created in the locations in which he finds them. They are then left to decay and photographs of the sculptures then become the art work.

What do you think this work is about?

Tide by Stuart Haygarth

Stuart Haygarth created this chandelier from the colourless plastic that he found on the beaches around the UK. The sea water and sand have naturally worn the plastic smooth and the chandelier looks like the moon, which controls the tides.

What is your first reaction to this work?

With the Beech Toward the Healing Light and Leaves by Garry Fabian Miller

Garry Fabian Miller made this photographic work (without using a camera) from 72 leaves gathered from a beech tree which once grew in the grounds of the Usher Gallery and 72 leaves from 36 beech trees around Lincolnshire. They were collected during spring and Autumn to show the sharp contrast between the colours of the two seasons.

What do you think the title might mean?

We had a go...

Found art? Junk art?

Willow tree art - using gravel in the garden!

Fish mobile art - using empty washed cat food pouches!

Sometimes it can feel like hunter gathering being an artist!
